

Global Ethics

Series Editors: Joy Gordon, Anthony F. Lang Jr.

After some inactive years, this book series has been re-launched at the beginning of 2022.

Under the direction of the new series editors, the Global Ethics book series seeks to advance research and conversation around a broad array of ethical issues in international and global matters. These may include (but are not limited to) topics such as global governance, human rights, global health disparities, climate change, economic sanctions, food security, civil and transnational conflict, cyber conflict, and migration. Theoretical works that bring out a comparative and/or Global South perspective, and those dealing with the legacy of colonialism (decolonial and postcolonial) are also welcome. All work must meet high standards of research and will be subject to peer review.

We are interested in publishing both monographs and edited collections from scholars, practitioners, and those engaged in civil society. Our particular interest is to provide a platform for scholars and practitioners from the Global South, and to host a dialogue involving diverse perspectives on issues of concern to the Global South.

About the Series Editors

Joy Gordon is Ignacio Ellacuría, S.J. Professor of Social Ethics in the Philosophy Department at Loyola University, Chicago, USA. Her areas of specialization include ethical issues in international relations, social and political philosophy, human rights, international law and global governance. She is on the editorial board of Ethics and International Affairs, and has published extensively on legal and ethical aspects of economic sanctions, including Invisible War: The United States and the Iraq Sanctions (2010). She has also published on issues involving the UN Security Council.
Email: cgordon3@luc.edu

Anthony F. Lang Jr. is Professor in the School of International Relations at the University of St Andrews, UK. His research focuses on the intersection of politics, law and ethics at the global level. These themes are explored through the lens of global constitutionalism, human rights, international responsibility, and the just war tradition. His previous work has addressed international political theory, with a particular focus on questions of agency, responsibility and punishment. These theoretical questions have been explored through various global practices such as humanitarian intervention, international security strategy, war crimes, and counter terrorism policy.
Email: al51@st-andrews.ac.uk

Interested in discussing a book idea or submitting a proposal to the series?

Contact the series editors or Palgrave editor Anne Birchley-Brun (anne-kathrin.birchley-brun@palgrave.com)

Visit the series page on our SpringerLink platform:
<https://link.springer.com/series/15010>