

State and Peasants in Mid-Nineteenth-Century Egypt: Some Archival Sources for the Study of Egyptian Rural History

In Review of Middle East Studies (2025), 59, 1-21

Maha Ghalwash

This article identifies some of the sources that are helpful for the study of peasant society in mid-nineteenth-century Egypt. In describing each of these sources, which involves specifying the nature of the data documented by a source, it highlights the potential use of each source and its limitations. It concludes that the examination of a combination of archival sources, rather than just one, enables the researcher to address some of the limitations of a particular source, and moreover to avoid developing distorted interpretations.

More Information

<https://doi.org/10.1017/rms.2025.4>

About the Author

Maha Ghalwash is Associate Professor at the British University in Egypt, where she is a founding member of the Department of Political Science. Her research focuses on state-society relations in Egypt during the nineteenth century; and her examinations of the contemporary Middle East focus on gender, Islamist movements, and minorities.